

Living near l'Anse à l'Orme for many years now, the place grew on me. It is a nice relaxing place where I can do bike rides with friends and a way to escape the noise of civilization. There are many animals there and when I go out with friends an family, we sometimes see deer. It is an amazing site and so close to home.

Houses near to that region are currently flooded due to the rain this year, as well as climactic changes. You have to really feel for them. They now have to redo the whole foundation to make sure it is sturdy. It is a very dumb move, a low blow, to build houses on such floodable lands, if it rains like this every year, so people need to spend more to repair the damage, and everyone falls into a giant debt pool, requesting help from the city. I personally know people from all around the island who come here just to go on that road, and only have nice things to say. It is a beautiful picturesque view in winter time. Seeing long plains and suddenly forest covered in snow, it's the only place on the island to behold such a thing. It is also the only place on the island that we can breathe fresh air. The air here is clean and smells nice. People, in the hundredths, come here just to breath. Would you like to wake up every morning to unbreathable, suffocating, carcinogenic smog, so thick, you can't see more than a couple meters in front of you.

Summary, destroying all at land for a small profit is a waste of time. Rather, build on abandoned industrial lands. That way, new houses are built while keeping green space.

Eric Enescu,

27 April of 2017